

Comparing Geographies: Counties

Wisconsin Health Service Areas

The Wisconsin Health Service Areas were developed by Wisconsin AHEC for health workforce data analysis. The Health Service Areas also provide a useful geography for monitoring local program outcomes related to health workforce development and population health status. Each Wisconsin HSA consists of a hub city with healthcare services and surrounding municipalities. With some exceptions (in northern Wisconsin and border communities) each service area has a population of at least 10,000, with most of the service area population within 30 minutes travel time of the hub city. While most hubs include a hospital, inclusion of a municipality in a service area is determined by travel time to the hub, not actual hospital or clinic utilization data. A zip code version of the service areas has also been developed. For more information on the development of the service area geography, see Introduction to Wisconsin Health Service Areas at www.ahec.wisc.edu/workforce. The website also has maps and data related to the HSAs available for download.

Counties

While the service area geography is based on municipalities (minor civil divisions), the service areas do not conform to county boundaries. This county overlay map provides a comparison.

Counties are commonly used for health care data reporting and are the basis for our public health system. Important aspects of the insurance marketplace are also county-based. However, the closest health care provider for many individuals may be in the next county. Also, it is important to note that using counties as the geography for reporting on health status may obscure significant within-county disparities and variations in important aspects of service delivery.

Two lists are provided here:

Table 1: Service Area Information for each County, listing the service areas that lie in whole or in part within that county

Table 2: County information for each Service Area
